somehow get away with maintaining an air of mystery. Either their true identities are hidden, or they manage to control their personal details so well, no one knows much about them. The five novelists listed here are fantastic writers, but the mystery behind them is so compelling, it threatens to overshadow their writing.

reclusive alcoholic scientist with violent tendencies investigates mysterious deep-sea creatures on a distant planet. Maybe a few too many plot hooks for a story this size, but the core ideas were quite good and the setting (with the glaring exception of the "Kyklopes" aliens) seemed well-realized.
